Rocky Mountain National Park (RMNP) is one of the most popular in the country. The vast area of protected wilderness includes more than 571 kilometres of hiking trails, 147 lakes and 77 mountains over 3,500 metres elevation. A day trip to RMNP is possible from Denver, with the town of Estes Park an option for those wanting to stay at the entrance to the park. Take on one of the scenic drives, including Trail Ridge Road, the highest continuous motorway in the United States, or seek out some of the stunning wildlife in the area, from elk in the meadows, bighorn sheep at Sheep Lakes, or moose along the banks of the Upper Colorado River.

In southern Colorado, the Great Sand Dunes National Park is made up of more than 70 square kilometres of sand dunes, with some up to 230 metres high. The dunes have formed over thousands of years, resulting in a unique contrasting landscape as arid sand dunes meet the base of the Rocky Mountains. Visitors to the park can take a hike up the dunes and embrace their inner child by sliding back down, explore the horseback riding trails, go for a nature walk or try their hand at four-wheel driving on the dunes. At certain times of year, the mysterious Medano Creek forms as melting snow from the nearby peaks creates a natural waterslide, perfect for tubing and cooling off.

Colorado’s version of the Grand Canyon, the Black Canyon of the Gunnison is a hidden gem, and is worthy of inclusion on any trip to Colorado. Known for its sheer cliffs that descend more than 600 metres to the Gunnison River below, the park is popular with experienced rock climbers, with the majority of visitors enjoying the many hikes and nature trails along the rim - we recommend the the Rim Rock Nature Trail, or the Oak Flat Loop Trail that lies just below the canyon rim. Black Canyon of the Gunnison is also an accredited International Dark Sky Park which makes it perfect for stargazing.

Mesa Verde National Park was established in 1906 to preserve the incredible archaeological sites, including over 600 cliff dwellings that date back to the ancient Pueblo people who called them home for more than 700 years. The National Park is located in southern Colorado, around 40 minutes drive west of Durango. Head to the Mesa Verde Visitor and Research Center to start your journey, where visitors can purchase tickets to see the three main cliff dwelling sites, Cliff Palace, Balcony House and Long House. Exhibits within the centre will help your clients plan their visit and offer more insight into the lives of the Ancestral Pueblo people.

In addition to these four National Parks, Colorado’s diverse landscape boasts natural hot springs, the headwaters of four major rivers, numerous peaceful lakes and reservoirs, 41 state parks, 8 national monuments and 58 mountain peaks that top 14,000 feet, known as ‘Fourteeners’.
